National Chung Hsing University
Graduate Institute of Taiwan Literature and Transnational Cultural Studies

Graduate Scholarship and Financial Assistance Regulations

1. These regulations are formulated in accordance with Article 7 of the "National Chung Hsing University Graduate Student Scholarship and Assistantship Implementation Guidelines."
2. The Graduate Student Scholarship and Assistantship Review Committee of the Institute consists of full-time faculty members, with the director serving as the convener. The committee is responsible for reviewing applications and allocating the scholarships and assistantships.
3. Graduate students of the Institute may apply for scholarships and assistantships after completing the registration process each semester. Scholarships and assistantships are awarded from September to July for new students and from August to July for continuing students.
4. The scholarships and assistantships of the Institute are categorized into two types: scholarships and assistantships. The funding for graduate student scholarships and assistantships comes from the university's budget. The amount of scholarships and assistantships for each graduate student may be adjusted monthly.

(1) Scholarships are awarded to graduate students with outstanding academic achievements or excellent research performance.

1. The Outstanding New Student Admission Award is granted to students who rank first in the entrance examination (both by recommendation and by general exam). Each recipient is awarded NT$100,000 for the first academic year. However, students who have already received a tuition-equivalent scholarship for outstanding undergraduate students admitted through recommendation to the master's program are not eligible for this award. If the recipient fails to complete registration, the award will not be granted.
2. Graduates from the university's undergraduate programs who are admitted to the Institute's master's program through recommendation and whose academic performance ranks within the top 20% of their class for the first six semesters (eight semesters for part-time undergraduate students and veterinary medicine students) will receive a tuition-equivalent scholarship for the first academic year, disbursed in September and February.
3. Graduate students who publish academic papers in peer-reviewed journals or present full papers at international or national conferences after passing a review process will receive a scholarship of up to NT$5,000 per paper. However, they cannot receive this scholarship in addition to the university's academic paper award.

4. Graduate students who present academic papers at international conferences co-organized by the Institute may receive a scholarship upon approval by the review committee.
5. Graduate students who achieve outstanding results in external proficiency exams may receive a scholarship upon approval by the review committee.

(2) Assistantships are provided to the following categories of graduate students:

1. Teaching assistants involved in practical teaching activities. The assistantship is awarded following the university's "Teaching Assistant System Implementation Guidelines."
 2. Administrative assistants who assist with administrative work. These positions are labor-based part-time assistantships, and the assistantship is awarded in accordance with Article 8 of the university's Graduate Student Scholarship and Assistantship Implementation Guidelines.
5. Graduate students who fail to fulfill their duties in assisting with teaching and administrative work, or who receive disciplinary action of a demerit or higher for violating university regulations, may be restricted from applying for or may have their scholarships and assistantships revoked.
 6. These regulations shall be implemented upon approval by the Institute Affairs Meeting and subsequent approval by the university president through administrative procedures. The same procedure applies to any amendments.
